and reinstall wow is kinda lame. the only thing i hate is my friends want to get a sims 2 game with me and its just not possible if your friends have all the games. Re: Sims 4 Store The store is going to be in-game Click to expand... The store isn't going to be in the game. The whole reason they got rid of the eStore was that it was a complete waste of time to download and install the stores and then be forced to reinstall just to get to the content you want. It was very costly and so bad they made it so players have to go out of their way to reinstall just to access the content that was made available to them. This isn't like the old days where there were games you just went and played. This is all "click here and click there" where you're doing the same work over and over again just to access the same content you downloaded before. Also the stuff that was added to the game such as the emote system and dynamic trait screen. These are just the icing on the cake and are also completely optional to be used. This time around there will be actual features that your going to be playing and not just going in-game to get content. I'm just trying to make sure we're not saying the same thing. I'm not saying that you're saying exactly the same thing as I am. I'm just saying that we're both saying that the store is going to be in-game, just that I'm saying that the store will be in-game as a completely optional feature. I'm not saying that you're saying the store is not going to be in-game. I'm just clarifying that I'm not saying that we're saying the exact same thing. Here's my sims4 thoughts: -The store is finally gone for good -The joys of having the store is that you can now play sims 2 and 3 and 3ds at the same time without having to mess with the e-store -A new experience is coming where you will not only buy your stuff but play it as well -I expect to see the store back soon (since 82157476af
